

Cambridge IGCSE™

LITERATURE IN ENGLISH

0475/43

Paper 4 Unseen

October/November 2021

1 hour 15 minutes

You must answer on the enclosed answer booklet.

You will need: Answer booklet (enclosed)

INSTRUCTIONS

- Answer one question: either Question 1 or Question 2.
- Follow the instructions on the front cover of the answer booklet. If you need additional answer paper, ask the invigilator for a continuation booklet.

INFORMATION

- The total mark for this paper is 25.
- All questions are worth equal marks.

This document has 8 pages. Any blank pages are indicated.

You are advised to spend about 20 minutes reading the question paper and planning your answer.

Answer either Question 1 or Question 2.

EITHER

1 Read carefully the following poem. It describes an owl, a nocturnal bird of prey.

How does the poet strikingly present his admiration of the owl?

To help you answer this question, you might consider:

- how the poet conveys the sounds the owl makes
- the different ways in which he presents the appearance of the owl
- how he presents the owl as a hunter.

Owl

is my favourite. Who flies like a nothing through the night, who-whoing¹. Is a feather duster in leafy corners ring-a-rosy-ing² boles of mice. Twice 5

you hear him call. Who is he looking for? You hear him hoovering over the floor of the wood. O would you be gold rings in the driving skull 10

if you could? Hooded and vulnerable by the winter suns owl looks. Is the grain of bark in the dark. Round beaks are at work in the pellety nest, 15

resting. Owl is an eye in the barn. For a hole in the trunk owl's blood is to blame. Black talons in the petrified fur! Cold walnut hands 20 on the case of the brain! In the reign of the chicken owl comes like a god. Is a goad in the rain to the pink eyes, dripping. For a meal in the day 25 flew, killed, on the moor. Six mouths are the seed of his arc in the season. Torn meat from the sky. Owl lives by the claws of his brain. On the branch 30 in the sever of the hand's twigs owl is a backward look.

Flown wind in the skin. Fine rain in the bones. Owl breaks like the day. Am an owl, am an owl. 35

¹ who-whoing: the sound an owl makes

² ring-a-rosy-ing: playing children's games with

OR

- 2 Read carefully the following extract from a novel set in the past. Jahan, an architect's apprentice, is watching the opening of a mosque that he helped to build. He has promised Captain Gareth, a sea captain, that he will steal valuables for him. Mihrimah is a girl Jahan is in love with.

How does the writer vividly present Jahan's changing feelings as the passage develops?

To help you answer this question, you might consider:

- Jahan's response to the crowd at the opening of the mosque
- Jahan's thoughts about the gems he has stolen
- how the writer shows that Jahan's feelings have changed after he has entered the mosque.

Jahan wormed his way through the crowd, determined to make the most of this day. Encircling him on all sides were the wealthiest men in the empire. Gems shone on their fingers, pouches bulged from under their elegant robes. To his left he saw a figure of ample proportions, a kadi¹ from Rumelia, talking fervently with another officer. A deep crimson rosary dangled from the man's hand, his prayers made of rubies.

5

As they poured towards the entrance, Jahan propelled himself against the man, wearing a contrite look as if being helplessly shoved in the commotion.

'*Effendi*², I beg your pardon.'

The kadi glowered, looking over Jahan's shoulder. He was swirled with the others through the door, unaware that the young man had snatched his rosary³. To avoid encountering him again, Jahan moved in the opposite direction, allowing people to pass him by. He waited to one side for a while. Thus it was some time before he entered the Suleimaniye Mosque. By then most of the guests had left the mosque itself and were touring the complex.

10

Feeling the gems under his fingers, Jahan walked into the mosque. His buoyant mood changed to dismay when he remembered Captain Gareth. The man was away on another voyage that would take at least a couple of months. Jahan had to keep his booty somewhere safe and give it to him upon his return. Even so, he wondered if he could sell the rosary and buy a gift for Mihrimah. Perhaps a haircomb made of mother-of-pearl and tortoiseshell. Secretly, he had been working on her sketches, over and over again, unsatisfied with the results. He had never expected it to be so hard to put on paper an image that was already etched indelibly in his mind.

15

With these thoughts he stepped over the threshold and stopped. Inside, a strange rainbow spilled from the windows. Crimson, cobalt-blue, vermilion⁴. He remembered, suddenly, how as a boy he would lie under birch trees and stare up, as though in search of heaven. Should the sky fall down the trees would hold it up, he would reassure himself. He had done this many times but once had an odd experience. On that day the sky was lurid⁵, the clouds so close he could reach out and tickle one. As he looked up, the green of the leaves had melted into the blue beyond. The feeling was so remarkable it had almost choked him up. It had lasted no longer than the blink of an eye, but he still remembered, after all these years, the taste of that elation.

20

Now, as he stood admiring the dome they had built on four giant piers, seeing it for the thousandth time but almost seeing it anew, he felt the same thing. The dome had blended with the firmament⁶ above. He fell on his knees, without a care as to who might be watching him. He lay down on the carpet, eyes closed, arms and legs open wide, once again that boy under the birch trees. Alone in the mosque, only a dot in this vast expanse, Jahan could think only of the world as an enormous building site. While the master and the apprentices had been raising this mosque, the universe had been constructing their fate. Never before had he thought of God as an architect. Christians, Jews, Muslims, Zoroastrians and people of myriad faiths and creeds lived under the same invisible dome. For the eye that could see, architecture was everywhere.

25

Hence, with a stolen rosary in his hand and an inexplicable gratitude in his heart, full of conflicts and confusions, under the majestic dome of the Suleimaniye Mosque, Jahan stood, a most intelligent animal-tamer and a most perplexed apprentice. Time, too, stopped with him. It seemed to him that in that instant he had, unknowingly, come a step closer to the centre of the universe.

30

35

40

45

¹ kadi: judge

² effendi: (Turkish) sir

³ rosary: prayer beads

⁴ vermilion: vivid orange-red

⁵ lurid: bright coloured

⁶ firmament: sky or heaven

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Permission to reproduce items where third-party owned material protected by copyright is included has been sought and cleared where possible. Every reasonable effort has been made by the publisher (UCLES) to trace copyright holders, but if any items requiring clearance have unwittingly been included, the publisher will be pleased to make amends at the earliest possible opportunity.

To avoid the issue of disclosure of answer-related information to candidates, all copyright acknowledgements are reproduced online in the Cambridge Assessment International Education Copyright Acknowledgements Booklet. This is produced for each series of examinations and is freely available to download at www.cambridgeinternational.org after the live examination series.

Cambridge Assessment International Education is part of the Cambridge Assessment Group. Cambridge Assessment is the brand name of the University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate (UCLES), which itself is a department of the University of Cambridge.